A gold Liberty Cymric freshwater pearl and turquoise necklace

A gold Liberty Cymric freshwater pearl and turquoise necklace, c.1900, designed by Archibald Knox, the centrepiece composed of three open panels, the largest set with a turquoise matrix bead and two freshwater pearls, the smaller panels with pairs of freshwater pearls. Graduated turquoise matrix beads strung on gold wire in between to a plain gold back chain. Marked 9c. Signed 'Cymric'

Condition Report

The dog tooth freshwater pearl drop to the right hand side, with an amateur repair. A white metal wire suspension loop instead of the original gold one. A little wear to the chain sections between the centrepiece. Some areas of tarnish. Natural differences in the turquoise matrix beads, both in terms of colour and inclusions. Push piece on the tongue broken (minor repair). 383mm long approximately.
